A particular system is controlled by an operator through commands entered from a keyboard. The average number of commands entered in an 8-hour interval is 60.
a. Suppose the processor scans the keyboard every 100 ms. How many times will the keyboard be checked in an 8-hour period?
b. By what fraction would the number of processor visits to the keyboard be reduced if interrupt-driven I/O were used? Only 60 visits would be required. The reduction is $1 - (60/288000) = 0.999$, or 99.9% Source: [PROT88].
